

“Wrapped in plastic”

This collage represents the earth full of microplastic and plastic waste. While everything is conveniently packed in plastic, many fail to realize the harm it causes on the environment and to people. The collage is in the shape of the earth, but the continents are made out of plastic and the water is made from loofahs which are typically made from plastic. This image uses the principle of contrast by replacing natural elements such as water and land with plastic bottles, plastic bags, and loofahs. By doing this it shows the effect plastic has on the environment. There is also texture that stands out through the swirling ocean pattern and layered surfaces that give a sense of depth and realism.

I decided to pick Sayaka Ganz as a socially responsible artist. Unlike many artists, her work uses plastic to create her art. She is well known for her creative way of using plastic to create multiple sculptures of animals which is a way to raise awareness about environmental issues. Sayaka Ganz expresses the impact plastic waste has on the environment. By using plastic waste and transforming it into beautiful flowing art, Ganz shares a powerful message about the importance of recycling and being mindful about eco-friendly habits. Her art promotes a message about plastic waste and how it affects the animals and environment.
