

Jude Hunter

“Devastation of floods”

I created my digital collage by putting pictures of floods that have happened to me together. I chose to create this collage because there is a global issue of floods destroying people's lives and nature as well. Floods affect people's lives by ruining their homes and property causing them to have financial problems. Flooding destroys nature because animals like deer and cows often die during a flood because they have nowhere to go and end up drowning. In my collage, there are many principles and elements. One principle of art in my collage is balance, this created by the formatting of the images with one in the background and two on each side creating balance between the different images. Another principle that is apart of my collage is movement, the water has movement because of the waves. One element of art that is incorporated into my collage is lines, there is a line separating the sidewalk and grass, there is also tow lines creating the front of the canoe. Another element of art that is in my collage is color, the water is brown, the grass is green and the sky is blue in all the pictures.

Jude Hunter

For my socially responsible artist, I chose Clinton Ndubuisi. An example of this artist being socially responsible is displayed in The Flood Painting. The painting depicts three people walking to their car together through waters during a flood. This painting shows social responsibility because it creates a feeling of connection between the art piece and the viewer by causing the viewer to think what if this was me in this situation. The art does this because it is a very realistic situation that can happen during a flood. Another way the art shows social responsibility is by displaying people helping others during difficulty. The art also makes the viewer take a moment to think about all the pain and difficulties caused by floods.